

ABSTRACT

To extract fetal cells from a sample of maternal blood or a fluid derived from maternal blood, sample liquid is moved over a collector surface bearing a ligand for the fetal cells. Chaotic advection in the liquid enhances the efficiency of cell collection.